- Criticisms of Liberal tradition in IR theory.
- Basic Assumptions of the Realist approach.
- Balance of Power
- Wallerstein views on nature of World Economy.
- Limitations of the Marxist approach of IR.

(a) Liberal tradition in IR theory is an idealistic tradition and believes in a moral conception of human nature. Thus, it believes that states seek cooperation and suggests approaches like institutionalism, democratic peace, functionalism and complex interdependence to address anarchy and security dilemma.

Basic Assumptions of Realist approach

1. Realists believe in an anarchic world order depicted as billiards ball model by Arnold Wolfers.
2. In an anarchic world, nations have a tendency to increase their power. This is based on their understanding of human nature according to which man has infinite lust for power.
3. Struggle for power breeds security dilemma threatening survival of other states.
4. Thus, nations go for 'self-help' and 'balance of power' to ensure survival in a competitive world.
5. Cooperation between nations is only possible when there are absolute gains involved.
6. Realists also take a state-centric view and deny the role of transnational actors.

And civil society in international relations

Morgenthau, the father of realism, in his 6 principles of realism also highlights that ethical and moral consideration have no place in international relations. He also equates power with national interest.

Thus, based on these assumptions, Realists have given a holistic analysis of international relations.

(C) Balance of Power

Balance of Power is a realist prescription for establishing peace and security in an anarchic world order.

According to Realists, self-help attempts by one nation are seen as threat by other nations giving rise to security dilemma. Thus, A' to counter the growing power of Liberals have opposed the Realist notion of BOP and suggest Collective security as a method to address security dilemma.

In modern times Paul Levy has given a new conception of Balance of Power. He has described three types of BOP:

② Soft BOP: informal arrangements, e.g., Quad grouping in Asia Pacific

(d) Wallerstein has described the nature of world economy in his 'World System Theory'. (WST)

Being a Marxist, Wallerstein's WST is inspired from Lenin's theory of Imperialism and Marx's notion of capitalistic state's expansion tendencies.

Wallerstein has divided world economy into three different types of states:

1. Core: Western developed countries

2. Semi-peripheries: developing countries like India, China

3. Peripheries: poor countries of Asia & Africa.

According to Wallerstein, Core countries exploit semi-peripheries & peripheries through trade linkages and by building dependency. This leads to development & under-development.

However, semi-peripheries have been able to extract some benefits from the globalized world order.

Wallerstein asserts that since the global order is based on capitalist nations, it is prone to booms & busts. He has predicted the temporal dimension of the system in terms of growth & decay to end. He asserts that the present phase of global economy is in fact the down-swing for capitalist economy. not

Thus, Wallerstein has given an invaluable insight on the functioning of the World economy. Remarks however his theory is criticized by some scholars as an example of economic determinism.

(e) Marxist approach of IR can be understood through three sub-schools:

1. Instrumental/Dependency School: Wallerstein, AG Franc, Samir Amin

2. Gramscian School: Robert Cox

3. Emancipatory School: Andrew Linklater

Limitations

1. Dependency school has been criticized as crude economic determinism

2. In an anarchical world order, Realists argue that ideas & perceptions have no role or limited role, as against Lenin's idea that every theory serves a political purpose.

- (b) Transnational relations are considered by sociological liberalism to be an increasingly important aspect of international relations. Explain.

- (c) Discuss in detail the liberal viewpoint on the State and Power in the context of International Relations.

2(a) The dominant conception of nature of International Relations is according to 'mainstream' theories like Realism, Liberalism and Social Constructionism. These theories are state-centred and build their ideas based on concepts like anarchy, security and accordingly suggest measures to establish peace and stability.

Feminist viewpoint of International Relations is a 'human-centric' paradigm which considers the 'mainstream' theory as 'male-centric' theories. Feminist theory, in general highlight the exclusion of women.

Ann Tickner has criticized Morgenthau's tenets of Realism. She argues that states have both masculine (war, security, etc.) and feminine (cooperation, peace, etc.) aspects. She says that politi-states can't be absolved off their moral responsibilities and national interest has to be ethical.

Cynthia Enloe in her book 'Bases, Bananas and Beaches' highlights the exclusion of women from the discipline. She has given a human centric idea of security.

2(b). Sociological liberalism is a sub-school of idealist school of international relations and aims to describe the importance of social relations in establish global and regional peace and stability.

Sociological liberals like John Burton, Rosenau and Karl Deutsch base their theories in the Social nature of man and how it can be utilized to build stable transnational relations.

They do not consider a state to be a monolithic entity like Realist, rather consider it to be made up of processes and organization, and communication and interaction among these can establish state relations.

John Burton has given the concept of 'hub model' of international relations which describes the multiple ways in which nations interact, building transnational relations.

Karl Deutsch has given the concept of 'security community' as opposed to Realist idea of 'security dilemma'. He suggests that increased interaction between people of different nations leads to 2.(C) Liberal viewpoint in context of International Relations⁽¹⁴⁾ is considered as the idealistic viewpoint. It is based on the ideas of scholars like John Locke and Immanuel Kant and takes a positive view of human nature, upon which the liberal theory of IR is based.

II Liberal viewpoint on state

Unlike Realists, who consider state in political terms alone and describe it as a monolithic entity, Liberals believe state is build up of multiple processes and organizations.

Liberals schools, like functionalism talk about cooperation between these processes between different nations to build cooperation between nations.

Liberals viewpoint on power

Unlike Realists, who consider power majorly in military terms, Liberals give a multi-dimensional view of power, consisting of political, economic, military domains.

They accept that due to anarchy, a struggle for power is there, but it can be addressed through international institutions. They propose the idea of collective security.

5.C). Hedley Bull is a Realist who has incorporated Liberal ideas to give his conception of International Society in the form of 'Anarchical society'.

As a Realist, Bull believes in Anarchy and struggle for power in the absence of any regulating authority at the global level.

However, he has accepted that some sort of cooperation is emerging in the form of regional blocks like European Union. But this cooperation is not complete and hence International Society

But Anarchical society is only limited to Europe and to some extent in South East Asia. The rest of the world still remains anarchic.

5-(d) The great debates in International Relations aim to prove discuss the true nature of IR and to arrive at the approaches to study IR.

The following were the part of great Debates in IR:

(1) Traditionalists vs Behavioralists

Behavioralists like Morton Kaplan tried to provide a scientific understanding of IR.

This debate was won by traditionalists.

(2) Neo-Neo Debate

between Neorealists and Neoliberalists in the backdrop of growing International cooperation post World War 2. The debate ended with Neoliberal accepting Realist ideas to give ideas like complex-interdependence and Liberal Realist like Hedley Bull accepting Liberal ideas to give concepts like Anarchical Society.

(3) Positivist vs Post-positivist approaches

Positivist approaches like Realism, Liberalism and Marxism emphasized on meta-narratives and universal truths, while post-positivist approaches like Feminism & Post-modernism suggested a human centric paradigm and an incredulity towards meta-narratives.

Theories like Peripheral Realism and Subaltern Realism.

Thus, the 4 great debates have greatly enriched our understanding of IR.

5.(e) 'Third World Security' highlights the nature of security in the 3rd world which is different from the developed world.

In Developed world, Economic, social and political consolidation of the state is complete. Thus, security is considered to be a state-centric paradigm and its most prominent form is 'border security' from other nation-states.

In contrast, the third world consists of former colonies, which have economic, social and political backwardness, political immaturity and social cleavages. This changes the nature of security in this world. In addition to border security (security dilemma), 3rd world also suffers from internal security threats (insecurity dilemma) as given by Md Ayub.

Thus, threats like Separatism, radicalization, poverty, etc. gain importance in context of third world and change the priorities of the state. And hence, the Realist notion of security is inadequate to understand security paradigm in the third world.

(a) Discuss the dominant and distinctive features of the non-western political process. (200 Words) (15)

(b) Discuss major paradigms of political economy approach. (200 Words) (15)

(c) While dependency theory owes much to it but also offers a critique of the Marxist notion of International Relations. Discuss. (250 Words) (20)

7(a) Non-western political process deals with the politics of the 3rd world or the developing world. Essential features of 3rd world which determine its political processes are:

- ① colonial history → less global role
- ② economic backwardness → poor economic indices
- ③ social cleavages → security threats → identity based movements
- ④ political underdevelopment.

Thus, different schools have described non-western political processes based on interpretations of these factors.

Remarks

Scanned by CamScanner

• Peripheral Realism of Carlos Escudé describes a hierarchy of nations wherein the rule-takers and revisionist states aim to alter the power balance.

• Sub-altern realism of Md Ayub suggests that political, social and economic consolidation is yet to be completed and thus Eurocentric paradigms are not applicable in non-western world. He suggests that developing countries still suffer from 'insecurity dilemma'.

• Marxist understanding describes an emergence of neo-colonialism and exploitation of developing countries (Nkrumah). Wallerstein describes in his world system theory the development of 'underdevelopment' and emergence of new bourgeoisie in developing world which upholds interest of western bourgeoisie.

Mamta Bhattacharya has given the concept of 'over-developed' state to describe how political progress has outstripped social and economic progress.

thus, the features of non-western political process are in marked contrast to western process.

7(b) Political Economy approach of international relations describes comparative politics analyses the politics of economy, i.e. compares nations based on economic system.

The two major paradigms of political economy approach are Liberal and Marxist school.

Liberal school exponents like Adam Smith, Ricardo etc. have compared nations based on open-ness of the economy.

Remarks

Scanned by CamScanner

Adam Smith has described the 'invisible hand of the market' and Ricardo talks about the comparative advantage theory wherein in a global free market system, each nation country is able to benefit because of its comparative advantage.

~~Marxist paradigm~~ describes how inequalities inherent in free trade disproportionately impact poor countries. Kwame Nkrumah has given the concept of neo-colonialism while Immanuel Wallerstein has described the uneven relations in his World System Theory in which the 'core' countries exploit the semi-peripheral 'peripheries' and how semi-peripheries have emerged as a new set of nations like India, China, etc. have benefited from globalization.

Remarks

① ~~Capital & power & or scholarly view so

Scanned by CamScanner

On the whole, political economy approach is considered as a robust method because of its empirical nature. Also it is both prescriptive and descriptive in nature. However, its focus is narrow and it ignores factors like social development, political modernization, etc.

7.(c) Dependency Theory of International Relations is a sub-school of Marxist analysis and describes how a system of exploitation has emerged.

~~From~~ Some prominent scholars of this school are Immanuel Wallerstein, ~~Praveen~~ A.G. Frank and Samir Amin. They have described, how in the post-modern world, capitalist countries have developed uneven linkages with the poor countries leading to 'development or underdevelopment'

Remarks

Scanned by CamScanner

"Wallerstein's theory of 'imperial' Dependency theory"

Immanuel Wallerstein has given the 'World System Theory' to describe the world system as being consisting of 'Core', 'Semi-peripheries' and 'Peripheries', and how the core has exploited the peripheries and how semi-peripheries have been able to get some benefit from globalization.

These ideas have been based on Marx's and Lenin's understanding of international relations. Marx had argued that "search for profit forces bourgeois to settle everywhere and nestle everywhere".

Lenin had described first world Marx as capitalistic man and how Capitalist mode of production breeds conflicts.

Remarks

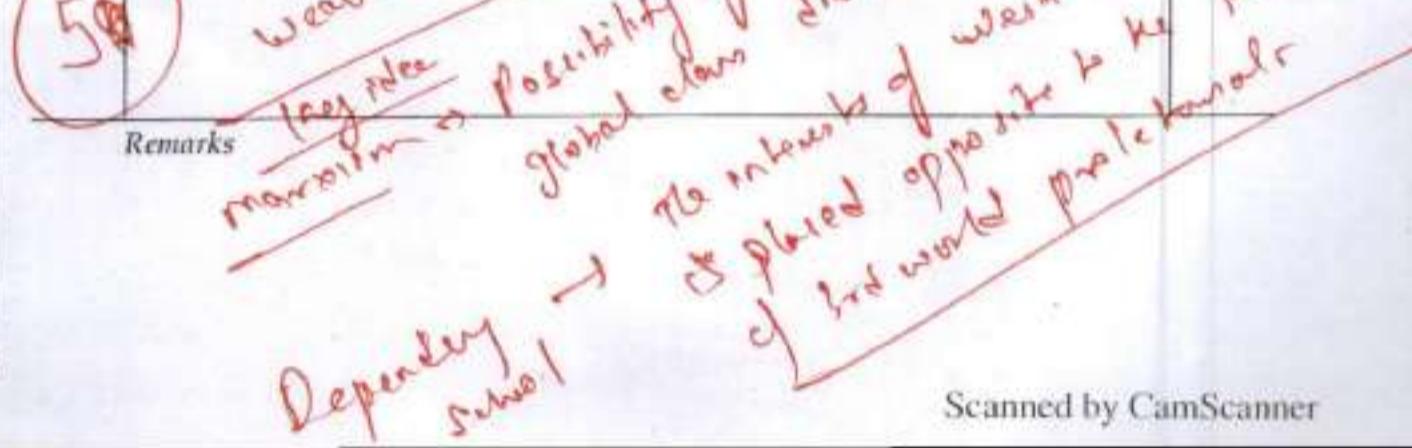

Scanned by CamScanner

Thus, building on these ideas dependency school has described the current state of international relations.

Critique of Marxist notion

Marx had ignored the role of civil society networks and importance of ideas. Dependency school, on the other hand believes that dependency of the periphery on the core is established in a number of ways including political, economic and social.

Thus, dependency school, while building on Marxist notions, also gives a critique of it.

(b) The state is a central concept in Marxist theories, but is viewed in a different way from a realist or liberal approaches. Examine. (200 Words) (15)

(c) Can it be claimed that there is no point in insisting on only one singular understanding of National interest? Discuss. (250 Words) (20)

8.(a) Comparative Method of International politics can be traced back to Aristotle who had compare 1st constitutions.

In modern times, Comparative method emerged in the form of Institutional approach wherein government / constitution of different countries was compared. This traditional approach followed by scholars like Strauss, Grimm, etc was criticized as static and neglecting the political realities. It was also found to be non-applicable outside Europe and was not value value-neutral.

Thus, various methods of ~~modern comparative politics evolved to address these shortcomings.~~

System Approach of David Easton and Structural Functional Approach of G. Almond and Powell attempts a scientific understanding of political processes. But this behavioral attempt was found inadequate to describe in depth the political realities.

Political Sociology approach attempts to understand influence of society on politics. It has two major schools: Marxist and Weberian. This approach has been very useful in understanding the politics of developing country like India.

Compares the political development of another nations. Political modernization is an important method of comparison between developed and developing world.

Thus, we can see that Comparative Method is now a very vibrant discipline with multiple schools and sub-schools.

Q. (b) Marxist notion of state is based on the premise that state is a class instrument, controlled by the bourgeois to further its interests.

In the realm of international relations, Marxists accept state to be the central notion. Marx himself held that "search for profit forces bourgeois to settle everywhere and nestle everywhere", and state is the important tool through which this is done. Theory of imperialism given by Lenin also describes how states establish dominance over other states for the benefit of bourgeois.

Marxist school also believes that Realist and Liberal methods are aimed at building neo-colonialism and not peace and establish security.

Difference from Realist and Liberal ideas of state

Realist take a value-free view of state which works solely on the basis of national interest. Realists also reject the influence on social or economic factors on state's foreign policy.

Liberal conception of state is a harmonious construct which aims to fulfill national interest through cooperation. Liberals also advocate for giving away some sovereign powers in order to establish institutions of global governance and world government in the long run.

Thus, while Liberal & Realist take state centred view with respect to domestic development and national interest, Marxist take a state centred view to describe how liberal & realist conception of states establish hegemony.

Q.(c) National Interest is one of the most ambiguous and most controversial concept in international relations.

Like all other concepts, national interest has also been interpreted differently by different schools.

Realists like Morgenthau equate national interest with power. Morgenthau believes that to check security dilemma and to ensure self-help, power is the most important tool, and thus becomes the key to national interest.

Liberals believe national interest to be multi-dimensional encompassing domains like economy, security, environment, etc..

Other scholars like Charles Beard believe that national interest is a vague notion.

Remarks

Used to justify political decisions. In his words, "if people have to respect the decision which hurt them and soldiers have to die for it, then what better term than national interest."

In recent times, Lee Kuan Yew has given another dimension of National Interest in the form of New National Interest which is based on economy and devoid of any emotional considerations.

Social Constructivist scholars like Alexander Verrett also believe that national interest is a subjective category which can acquire any meaning based on the choice of the state and ruling elite.
