✓ Answer the following questions: (150 Words Each)

(10 × 5 = 50)

- (a) Satyagraha versus passive resistance
- (b) Discuss the need for internal democracy in Political Parties in India.
- (c) Secularism is contested idea in the Indian scenario. Discuss.
- (d) Role of Strong Opposition in democracy
- (e) Role of Pressure Groups in Policy Formulation

1. a) Mahatma Gandhi brought several new tools to combat colonialism, and among them were Satyagraha and passive resistance. He was influenced by Thoreau, Tolstoy, etc. Passive resistance means showing political discontent by purposefully disobeying unjust laws and then voluntarily courting arrest. Non violence was an essential component of this strategy. Its goal is to erode the legitimacy of the state, while turning public opinion against them.

Satyagraha was an Indian version of passive resistance. Gandhiji wanted to give his own method an Indian identity, so that people can easily identify with it, and ~~then~~ invited suggestions from the people. He was impressed with "Satyagraha", which meant seeking truth.

Gandhiji later describes its unique characteristics. It is not merely being "passive." It requires enormous will power and active open defiance against oppression.

It is not based on hate. He says "Hate the sin, not the sinner". Ahimsa ~~and~~ is its weapon, to achieve a "change of heart".

It was ~~widely~~ finally successful in gaining constitutional concessions, and eventual freedom. Other leaders like Martin Luther King, Mandela, etc drew this idea from Gandhiji.

b) Political parties in India have evolved over time. They are usually functioning around a few charismatic leaders, even in ideological parties like CPI. Over time, many parties suspended organisational elections, like the Congress in 1967, or it becoming ineffective.

Lack of ~~organ~~ internal democracy has several dangers. Parties become more grounded in the 'cult of personality' and centralisation of power. It paves way for dynastic politics and nepotism in appointments.

It propagates a "high command culture" where grass root level workers being having no voice. The dissident party members will have no place to protest, paving way for horse trading, splits, defections, etc weakening democracy and political ethics.

This decreases participation, and eventually political legitimacy.

E. ~~S~~ Sundharan in his work "Fragmentation of Party Systems", cite this as a major cause for the erosion of traditional Congress support base.

Internal democracy can have a few issues too, like the difficulty in electing women members, dangers of populism, caste and religious cleavages, etc.

However, its positives outweigh the negatives, and must be effectively enforced.

- c) D.E. Smith in his work "India as a secular state", gives three defining features of secularism
- ① Freedom of religion
  - ② Equality between ~~of~~ all persons
  - ③ Separation of state and religion

In India, the state played an active role in propagating a 'secular' ideology, and interfered to modernise religions, correcting ancient injustice.

This has led to different contestations.

D. F. Smith says that since the state interferes with citizens' private belief, India is not truly secular.

Ashish Nandy calls himself an 'Anti Secularist' because it is unsuited to Indian culture. Religion is an essential component of Indians, and 'Tolerance' was a better option than 'secularism'.

Akeel Bilgrami points to the archimedean and "non-negotiable" character of Indian secularism. This is cited as the reason for rise in communalism, hindutva, violence etc in the present day.

Rajeev Bhargava criticises Ashish Nandy's idea, arguing that Indian secularism was based on "principled distance" from religion, to prevent India turning into a communal majoritarian state like Pakistan.

d) Opposition parties are a key ~~set~~ component of a democracy. Democracy ~~is~~ means the rule of popular sovereignty. But in essence it is "legislation determined by the majority."

The opposition ~~plays~~ becomes the vanguard of democracy, ensuring the ruling party and the executive do not misuse their powers.

Strong opposition safeguards the rights of minorities, because it is unusual for minorities to form governments on their own.

They play a critical role in political education and awareness generation of the masses. They create a "credible democratic alternative". This prevents the discontent among people turning into a revolution. It prevents corruption through budget scrutiny, and starting debates and discussion.

However, it sometimes plays a negative role. "Government overload theorists" like Richard Rose and Anthony King show that the opposition parties try to "outbid" the government, resulting in ~~an~~ "ever spiralling promises". They turn populist, ignores practical and financial difficulties (eg. loan waivers, reservations etc). It can stall critical legislation for purely political reasons (eg. GST). All these result in "democratic overload" and a consequent loss of legitimacy and public faith in the government.

Give definition of scholars

"Pressure Groups" can be defined as a group of people with common interests, working towards the common goal of influencing the political system for their benefit.

Role of pressure groups in policy formulation has evolved over the years.

Remarks

They represent their group interests, like class, caste, etc. Until late 1960s, the main pressure groups were the capitalist class, looking for tax breaks, subsidies, protection against foreign competition, etc.

~~Hogendae~~ ~~Yates~~ Susanne and Lloyd Rudolph show that pressure groups "deepen democracy". The "first democratic upsurge" in 1960s of "middle castes" and "second democratic upsurge" of the SCs in 1990s has increased political participation. Specific issues of the people, like farmers against globalisation gain a voice through pressure groups. It also serves as a safety valve against political discontent.

However, there <sup>negative roles too</sup> are ~~issues as well to their role~~.

They represent a very narrow interest, causing political and social instability, like the Jat and Patel agitations -

Anne Kruger shows the new "rent seeking" attitude of politicians for representing pressure group interests, which promotes political corruption. There is also disparity in size and influence between groups, eg: Pharma lobby vs environmentalists.

Therefore, as Mancur Olson argued, pressure groups do stimulate political participation but any lasting gains can be made only through political parties.

3. a) BL Fadia in "Reforming the election Commission" argues that the ECI was designed to be the enforcer of democratic legitimacy in India.

However, there are several issues in its appointment.

The ECI draws its powers from Art-324 of the Constitution. It states that the commissioner will be appointed by according to law made by the Parliament. But the parliament has not made any law yet, which makes the office vulnerable to executive manipulation.

In 2009, the CEC Gopalaswami accused his successor fellow EC

Navin Chavola of partisanship. President ignored his accusation. It showed the potential of partisanship. Also, there is a disparity in the terms of CEC and ECs which can affect units working as a single unit.

There are no pre-prescribed qualifications. The officers are not barred from further appointments by the government unlike ~~the~~ UPSC chairman.

Irrelevant

The absence of dedicated manpower makes the assigned staff vulnerable to transfers, which was pointed out by CEC T.N. Seshan.

The Commissioner's appointment does not involve the opposition parties nor any "neutral" person like Supreme Court judges. This creates distrust, best seen in the recent EVM lacking controversy and calls to go back to ballot paper.

3. b) Agrarian and peasant perspective of the National movement constantly evolved, from the "Moderate" phase till 1947.

Extremists like Tilak, Anandabindo, etc toned down the 'elitism' significantly. They reached out to peasants through Swaraj, "Swadeshi" and "boycott". But the peasants were not organised and didn't have local leadership.

1918 marked a watershed with the appointment creation of UP Kisan Sabha. Leaders like NCG Ranga, Baba Ramachandra, etc sparked off the Kisan Sabha movement, branching into Eka movement, Kheda Satyagrah, etc.

Sumit Sarkar characterised these new movements as 'parallel' to the Indian National movement.

led by the Congress. They fought for agrarian demands and only had a limited "anti-colonial" edge. This was because of the simultaneous struggle against the local landlords, who were a major supporter of the Congress. eg. Madari Pasi led Eta movement wasn't supported by the Congress.

However the agrarian movements significantly influenced the direction of the Congress. Faizpur resolution of the Congress, its Election Manifesto and the pro-peasant attitude of Congress ministries are its evidence.

3.c) "Hybrid electoral system" refers to a combination of 2 different or more different systems, most commonly the FPTP, with a version of Proportional representation system. Its goal is to preserve the simplicity of FPTP, while reducing its inherent bias against minorities.

"First Past the Post" is said to be biased against minorities for 2 reasons.

① Mechanical effect, where in a single member constituency, all votes of one representation or under representation of parties based on a threshold of votes.

② Psychological effect, where voters tend not to "waste" votes on smaller parties with no realistic chance.

To combat this, two common models are proposed

②

Remarks

① Mixed member Proportional system which analyses the outcome of FPTP system and seeks to correct underrepresentation by a PR system for some seats.

② Parallel System where the PR & FPTP systems coexist independent of each other.

However, it can have disadvantages. It increases the cost of elections. FPTP system was easy to understand by even the illiterate masses due to its simplicity. Single member constituency makes the loyalty of the elected candidate with the people, rather than the party. Proportional representation is biased towards political instability because numerous small groups will vie for power. It will make difficult unpopular decisions impossible. The chaotic situation of 1989 ~~on~~ till 2004 was an era of communalism, populism, political opportunism, and horse trading. Susanne and Lloyd Rudolph shows the "emergence of a defector's market".

Also, highly successful countries like US, UK, etc still follow the FPTP system for the lower house.

4. b) Land Reforms in India refer to
- 1) Abolition of intermediaries (mainly zamindars)
  - 2) Tenancy reforms
  - 3) Land Ceiling Acts.
  - 4) Promoting cooperativisation.

Its outcomes have been highly varied. There have been a few success stories like Kerala and West Bengal, while other states were mostly unsatisfactory. ~~It is~~ Abolition of intermediaries were the most successful of the land reforms, because there was a polity wide consensus. The landlords themselves were socially and politically isolated.

Tenancy reforms had some success, but the newly land owners after zamindari abolition were resistant. Bipan Chandra argues that, ~~these~~ these new classes were politically mobilised and resisted reforms by lobbying or legal measures.

Land ceiling had the least consensus and least success. ~~The~~ The owner-tenants exploited loopholes in ceiling laws by transferring land to family members and other measures. Some states governments themselves were hesitant and delayed its implementation.

Cooperativisation was highly misunderstood by most farmers and eventually were dominated by big <sup>rich</sup> farmers.

Bardhan and Mukherjee attributes these varying outcomes to ideological factors. The left government in Kerala and W. Bengal were enthusiastic and hence more successful.

Francine Frankel in "Paradox of accommodative politics" show that the multi-class character of Congress prevented effective reforms.

The Judiciary was also resistant to lofty government ideologies like socialism, opting to safeguard citizen's right to property.

4. c) Political democracy and the political economy were in a process of turmoil from 1967 to 1990s.

Indian polity was characterized by an end of the "Congress System" and ~~the~~ in the words of Logendra Yadav, "The first democratic upsurge" was taking place." Within the Congress, the second generation of leaders in the aftermath of Kamraj Plan lacked the legitimacy and charisma of the Nehruvian era. The newly politicised "middle castes" were now a determinant force in Indian politics.

The political economy and development continued in the "Import substituting Industrialisation" model of PC Mahalanobis.

Anne Kaegele in "Contrast to transitions: India and Korea" shows two consequences of this policy

a) Promoting democracy and social mobilisation: Industrialisation was a "modernisation" strategy which created urbanisation, literacy and mass communication. This spurred increased political activity, best seen in pre-Emergency period. It also increased demands.

Susanne and Lloyd Rudolph call it the emergence of a "demand polity" from a "command polity"; increasing spending in social sectors & subsidies.

b) Low productivity

Import substitution model did not incentivise efficiency. Government protected infant industries. It created 'rent seeking' behaviour among politicians, promoting corruption. This is best seen in different trajectories of India and S. Korea.

	Productivity growth

Both these factors created the unsustainable fiscal situation

Exogenous shocks of Gulf War and IMF reform demand spurred economic transformation, with the 'LPG - Liberalisation, Privatisation and Globalisation'.

In the Political sphere, it was reflected in unstable governments with small majorities and the 'second democratic upsurge' of the SCs. Federalism and Regionalism gained ~~the~~ primacy.

Thus, the nature of political democracy and development were closely interlinked.

R. Palme Dutt in his classic "India today" calls the National movement as a movement of elites. Congress from its formation was dominated by the landed classes and the bourgeoisie. It was a "safety valve" for the revolutionary zeal of the masses.

Gandhiji's attempt to promote "trusteeship" and "sarvodaya" were seen as "amelioration of class conflict". The INC rarely supported the Indian workers against Indian capitalists. Labour reforms

Its main aim is to safeguard J & K's culture and autonomy.

However, it has been criticised.

Coalitional politics ~~has~~ refer to political groups of diverse viewpoints and ideologies coming together to form government or opposition.

2) 1967 to 1989 -

E. Sridharan in his work "Fragmentation of political parties" call this ~~phase~~ the emergence of "multiple bipolarities". It marks the emergence of arrival of "dominant middle class caste" parties and new leaders. Separation of Assembly and ~~the~~ Parliament election in 1969, facilitated one at a time battles with Congress eg: Left vs Congress in Bengal, Kerala, Tripura.

3) 1989 to present: Emergence of coalitions due to fragmentation of parties. The underprivileged groups like SCs became a political force. BJP and Congress became power centres for opposing coalitions; i.e., NDA and UPA.

This transformation brings both benefits and challenges.

It has made Indian polity truly federal. DMK of Tamil Nadu despite having only 13 MPs got 2 cabinet 2 ministerial posts in 2004. ~~lower castes and~~

However, it has also paved way for politicisation of social cleavages on communal and caste lines. Populism is causing a "democratic overload", like the 1997 crisis. "Polity wide parties" have declined. Forming consensus on important issues like GST, uniform civil code, etc have become tedious.

Thus, benefits and challenges coexist.

c) Class inequality in India is a modern phenomenon based on horizontal division of society ~~into~~ due to economic differentiation.

From ~~at~~ independence till 1967, the main inequality was ~~between~~ within the industry. A small but capable capitalist class grew up, due to the Import substitution industrialisation strategy. Proletariat had benefits due to labour laws, pensions, etc.

Green Revolution in 1960s and 1970s were based on supplying high yielding seeds to certain areas of Punjab, Haryana and UP. It needed heavy investment in water supply and fertilizers, and hence only rich farmers benefited. This created a wide gulf between rich farmers capitalist farmers and the marginal farmers.

Efforts towards Globalisation from 1991 onwards is furthering inequality. The IT sector led Services sector employs less than 25% population, but earns more than 60% of GDP. It has promoted the rural-urban divide and between formal and informal workers.

Impact of Colonial influence:

It can be seen from ~~in~~ ~~most~~ The agriculture sector stagnated during the British period. It turned land into a commodity from the Permanent Settlement of Bengal onwards. This laid the bases of agricultural inequality between landlords and tenants.

~~So~~ Bipan Chandra points to "deindustrialisation" with the destruction of handicrafts. This pushed most people into agriculture. Simultaneous industrial revolution
